That, according to the report of the investigation into the killing of Daniel Morcombe, is how the initial response to the lonely 33-year-old's murder became "a gift". A gift that helped find bodies, a source of inspiration that was to push a generation into crime, and a murderer who had been allowed to slip through the cracks. That young man was Daniel Morcombe. The circumstances of his death were horrific – a sudden drop from a balcony at a four-star hotel in Broadbeach, injuring his hip. Tragically, the source of his hip injury and the cause of his death was not on display in the report into the NSW police investigation that emerged on Wednesday. Morcombe was found dead in his suite at the Bondi Junction Hotel on 16 February 2005. The report found the police investigation – in which an alleged crime was recorded but no murder was committed, and no charges laid – was led by a detective who was influenced by family members, was sensitive to their psychological needs, but was not sufficiently motivated to deliver a thorough investigation. Morcombe's mother was believed to be a family friend of Detective Inspector Neil Comrie. In interviews conducted by Comrie, Morcombe's family told investigators they had no reason to believe he had committed suicide. They were asked about a number of aspects of his lifestyle, and said they had no reason to believe he had financial problems. 50b96ab0b6
